Economics reading list:

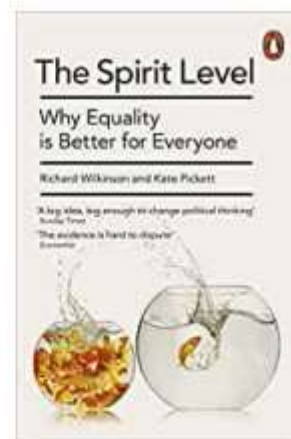

This is an excellent collection of short essays which challenge conventional economic thinking. Highly recommended.

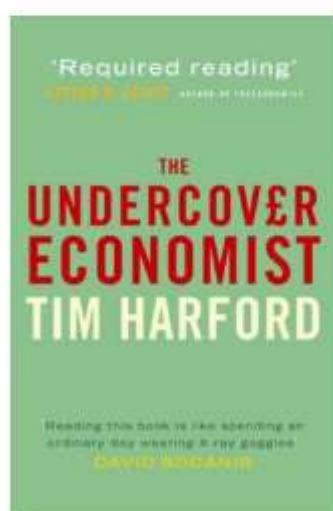

The follow up to the above best-seller, again exploring behavioural approaches to global warming, terrorism and kindness.

An investigation into market forces and how they sometimes change people's morals.

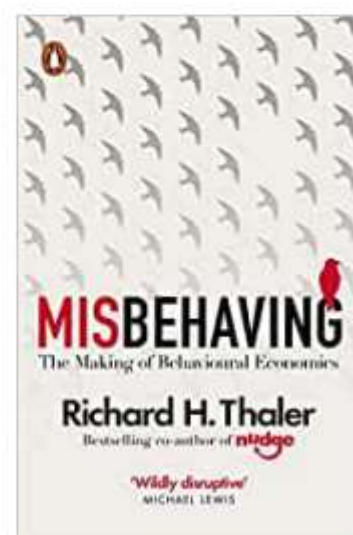

An excellent, relatively easy to read academic study into how inequality creates problems in society

A humorous look at economic phenomena such as who makes most money from fair trade coffee and why it's so hard to get a decent second-hand car.

The follow up to the above best-seller. A refreshing analysis of economic crises, bonuses and what would happen if everyone's debt was written off.

The story of how behavioural economics leapt from Chicago University to the mainstream.
